Transforming Science Into Solutions

Extension addresses some of our state’s and world’s grand challenges – from supporting safe food systems and helping families adopt healthier lifestyles to equipping youth with life skills and helping farmers feed, clothe, heal and fuel a growing population.

Agriculture

Food + Nutrition

4-H Youth Development

Environmental + Natural Resources

Home + Families

Community + Rural Development

We live and work in the communities we serve, applying scientific knowledge to our neighbors’ everyday problems. At Extension, we help people live healthier, happier and more successful lives.

Putting Knowledge to Work

Our universities don’t just conduct groundbreaking research; through Extension, we transfer scientific knowledge, tools and technology directly into the hands of North Carolinians.

Local Experts Providing Local Solutions

From Murphy to Manteo, 1,000-plus Extension field agents and subject-matter specialists – trusted public servants and leading authorities in their areas – address local needs in communities statewide.

Meeting People Where They Are

Wherever you call home in North Carolina, Extension is there to help through educational programs, events, on-site visits, publications, school curricula, 200-plus websites and more.

N.C. Cooperative Extension is a strategic partnership of NC State University, N.C. A&T State University, USDA’s National Institute of Food and Agriculture (USDA-NIFA), and local governments statewide.
